NEW QUESTION: 3

You are developing a messaging solution to integrate two applications named WeatherSummary and WeatherDetails. The WeatherSummary application displays a summary of weather information for major cities. The WeatherDetails application displays weather details for a specific city. You need to ensure that the WeatherDetails application only receives weather details for the city that the user selects in the WeatherSummary application.

What should you do?

- A. Create an Azure Service Bus Queue communication. In the WeatherDetails application, implement the ReceiveAndDelete method.
- B. Create an Azure Service Bus Topics object. In the WeatherDetails application, create a filter.
- C. Create an Azure Service Bus Queue communication. In the WeatherDetails application, implement the PeekLock method.
- D. Create an Azure Service Bus Relay object. In the WeatherDetails application, create a filter.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Explanation/Reference:

Explanation:

Within a namespace, you can use one or more instances of three different communication mechanisms, each of which connects applications in a different way. The choices are:

Queues, which allow one-directional communication. Each queue acts as an intermediary (sometimes called a broker) that stores sent messages until they are received. Each message is received by a single recipient. Topics, which provide one-directional communication using subscriptions. A single topic can have multiple subscriptions. Like a queue, a topic acts as a broker, but each subscription can optionally use a filter to receive only messages that match specific criteria.

Relays, which provide bi-directional communication. Unlike queues and topics, a relay doesn't store inflight messages; it's not a broker. Instead, it just passes them on to the destination application.
