In most cases, applications that depend on X.509 certificates, such as Secure/Multipurpose Internet Mail Extensions (S/MIME), Secure Sockets Layer (SSL) and smart cards, are required to validate the status of the certificates used when performing authentication, signing, or encryption operations. The certificate status and revocation checking is the process by which the validity of certificates is verified based on two main categories: time and revocation status.

Although validating the revocation status of certificates can be performed in multiple ways, the common mechanisms are CRLs, delta CRLs, and Online Certificate Status Protocol (OCSP) responses.
