NEW QUESTION: 3

Which type of algorithm is considered to have the highest strength per bit of key length of any of the asymmetric algorithms?

- A. Rivest, Shamir, Adleman (RSA)
- B. Advanced Encryption Standard (AES)
- C. El Gamal
- D. Elliptic Curve Cryptography (ECC)

Answer: D

Explanation:

The Answer: "Elliptic Curve Cryptography (ECC)". This type of cryptography is based on the complex mathematics of elliptic curves. These algorithms are advantageous for their speed and strength.

The other answers are not correct because:

"Rivest, Shamir, Adleman (RSA)" is incorrect because RSA is a "traditional" asymmetric algorithm. While it is reasonably strong, it is not considered to be as strong as ECC based systems.

"El Gamal" is incorrect because it is also a "traditional" asymmetric algorithm and not considered as strong as ECC based systems.

"Advanced Encryption Standard (AES)" is incorrect because the question asks specifically about asymmetric algorithms and AES is a symmetric algorithm.
